St. Henry Parish Office Hours

MONDAY - THURSDAY

9:00 AM - 3:00 PM

The church teaches about social justice in a wide variety of topics – labor, housing, health care, and racism, just to name a few. Is there an area the church needs to focus on more today? There are many ways to measure the size and scope of problems. The cost of the injustice, or how difficult or costly it is to fix, or the number of people affected, or the impact on innocent lives are all valid ways to determine what areas are priorities and where one's attention should be focused. Many of these arguments are used in political debate, especially before an election.

But the biggest problem facing the church, as a community of faith and as an institution, is not a specific problem, but a social attitude. For many reasons, our society has grown indifferent to human suffering. People are no longer affected or outraged when others are killed, children are starving, or disease is left unchecked. People have their own problems and are often so busy that they do not have the time or energy left to focus attention on the needs of others. Our lack of concern or our feeling of powerlessness allows the evil of human suffering to continue without resistance. There is no hope, no promise of tomorrow, no sense that something can be done to help others in need. But we can do something, as faith tells us. No problem is bigger than God.

When each of us does our part, even in a small way, the world is a better place for everyone. Never underestimate the power one person has to make a difference.
